

BACKGROUND

THE ANGEL HAIR FOUNDATION

In January of 2006, Staci Wright, an active 13-year-old girl, was diagnosed with cancer. The chemotherapy treatments she underwent caused her auburn hair to fall out, putting a dent in her confidence as she fought her way to health. Every time she looked in the mirror, she was reminded of the struggle she was going through. Her parents, Deborah and Rick Wright, found a revolutionary cranial prosthetic hair system that works like a wig but looks like real hair. Even Staci's doctor could not tell the difference.

Staci was able to play soccer, snowboard, and wakeboard without having to worry about her hair falling off or needing to be removed prior. The system changed her life and the way she healed—she called the system her “Angel Hair.”

Unfortunately, many families cannot afford the system for their children. Staci decided that every child that suffers hair loss deserves “Angel Hair” and she founded the Angel Hair Foundation, which sponsors the cranial prosthesis system for children in Oregon. Now children and teens all across Oregon can enjoy beautiful hair that gives them the confidence to visualize their way to a healthy future. Many children and teens have received the Angel Hair Systems and are living happier lives because they have the confidence to travel the road to recovery.
